FOREWORD

Today as never before, youth is aware and apprehensive of the future. We learn in history class that nations are becoming ever more dependent upon one another for raw materials, manufactured goods, and for market places. With the fast rate of increase in population, and far-reaching development in means of communication, the world has grown smaller. It is now a world-unit, not a series of individual and unrelated areas.

In physics class we learn that an entire continent can be eradicated from the earth within five minutes. In the past, enemy territories have fought long and bitter wars, each contending for self-preservation at the death of the other. Yet, because these areas were isolated from the rest of the world, and because their methods of warfare were limited, ruin took place on a small scale. There was always a victor and his spoils.

However, the twentieth century has witnessed two wars which, because of the ever increasing interdependence among nations, have involved the entire world. No longer do soldiers meet face to face on the battlefield. Modern warfare concerns the long range destruction of the human race within a matter of minutes.

These factors have had a profound effect on contemporary thought. After rebelling against overemphasis on science and the standardization of modern mass production and distribution, society has stopped breathless at the brink of a New Age. The world is experiencing a transition not felt since the Renaissance emerged from the dim corridors of the Middle Ages. Modern art has attempted to depict for us what new hopes or horrors exist in the fourth dimension into which we are fearfully plunging, as did Columbus into the perils of an unknown sea.

Wrenched from the ties of the familiar past, we are bound to assume the burden of total world destruction, or survival and conquest of the unfathomable infinitude of the universe.

DEDICATION

MRS. JOSEPHINE RODES

We, the Inlook Staff of 1958, dedicate our yearbook to the teacher who, for the past five years, has characterized the English classes with her individualism and candid humor. She has conveyed to us her love of English literature, and above all, has challenged our ideas and provoked new thought. In recognition of the unique spirit which she has given to our years with her, we present this book to the unforgettable Mrs. Josephine M. Rodes.

MISS GLADYS PETERSON

Each year when our senior class is about to graduate, we who remain here think we shall never find another class so responsible, helpful, and full of good ideas as the girls who are about to leave us. Thirteen years at Westridge have convinced me that each class is succeeded by one that is different but equally capable of leading the school successfully. Therefore I congratulate the Class of 1958 on their leadership this year and I assure them that the classes pictured in this Inlook will in turn assume the responsibility of making Westridge the school which we may all continue to love and in which we all may justly take pride.

RENASENCE

All I could see from where I stood Was three long mountains and a wood: I turned and looked another way, And saw three islands in the bay. So with my eyes I traced the line Of the horizon, thin and fine. Straight around till I was come Back to where I started from: And all I saw from where I stood Was three long mountains and a wood. Over these things I could not see: These were the things that bounded me: And I could touch them with my hand,-Almost, I thought, from where I stand. And all at once things seemed so small. My breath came short, and scarce at all. But, sure, the sky is big, I said: Miles and miles above my head; So here upon my back I'll lie And look my fill into the sky. And so I looked, and, after all, The sky was not so very tall. The sky, I said, must somewhere stop, And—sure enough! — I see the top. The sky, I thought, is not so grand; I 'most could touch it with my hand! And, reaching up my hand to try. I screamed to feel it touch the sky. I screamed, and—lo!—Infinity Came down and settled over me; And, pressing of the Undefined The definition on my mind, Held up before my eyes a glass Through which my shrinking sight did pass Until it seemed I must behold Immensity made manifold; Whispered to me a word whose sound Deafened the air for worlds around, And brought unmuffled to my ears The gossiping of friendly spheres, The creaking of the tented sky, The ticking of Eternity.

SALLY MAGE

Student Body President

This year the Student Council has sponsored a variety of projects. One innovation was the Westridge School Day in which Student Body officers from other schools in the area participated. The council has also revised the rules of the school constitution in order to make them more concurrent with the Hanor Code, and has initiated a plan for a "New Girls' Day" at the beginning of next year to acquaint new students with the school life.

The Council feels that students inevitably involved in everyday problems, lose sight of the good in living under the Honor Code. This good extends into the future, for all life is based on a code of honor. To prepare us for this future is the goal of the Westridge Honor Code.
